W. C. T. U. Notes.

One-fourth of the entire population of Sweden belongs to temperance societies. The W. C. T. U. has a membership of 6,000 in the country, and there are six other strong organizations. The Student's Total Abstinence Society of Sweden has a membership of 11,000. It is said that in all the villages and rural districts of that country there are fewer than 100 saloons.

The great steamers that ply the ocean are coming to be examples of practical prohibition. Not long ago a certain steamer was bound for Liverpool on which were the graduates of thirty-seven universities and colleges—Oxford, Cambridge, Harvard, Yale, Smith, and thirty-two other well-known institutions of learning. They were scholars, men and women, acquainted with the world's best thought and scientific teaching. They were going abroad for rest, study, and recreation, as the case might be. The long dining room was filled with people, but not one glass of alcoholic drinks was seen by the side of a single plate. This could not have happened a half century ago or a quarter of a century. Truly the world's best and noblest men and women are coming to appreciate the value of total abstinence.

A record is given of a British physician who rejected the insurance application of Robert Warner, a London Quaker, because he was "endangering his health," he said, "by drinking water." This was in 1844. Enlisting a few friends to unite with him and inaugurate the double plan of insurance now common in Great Britain, through which the total abstainer is given forty per cent rebates above the moderate drinker, he lived to see his persecution become instrumental in effecting much good.

Insurance companies are coming more and more to look with suspicion upon the man who drinks liquor. The Mutual Life Insurance Companies of New York, after long years of study and careful observation, says: "The loss by death among total abstainers is seventy-six per cent, and that among non-abstainers is ninety-six per cent." Thirteen of the well-known modern fraternities debar liquor dealers.

Mr. William Windom, ex-Secretary of the United States Treasury, who was ready at any time to stand before any audience and with his splendid eloquence denounce the saloon, declared that the next great reform on the world's calendar would be the destruction of the beverage liquor traffic.

A REVIEW OF OLD LEON.

Old Times and Old Things Rapidly Being Displaced by New.

Situated mid an outspread of gracefully undulating, clayey uplands, in North Middle Florida, lie banking in almost perpetual sunshine, fanned with incessant saline airs from the Mexican sea hard by, and tempered by recurring showers, fifty square miles of fertile territory incorporating the county of Leon, in the State of Florida.

For upwards of eighty years Tallahassee, its capital site, and salubrious surroundings, have experienced presence and purpose of numbers of cultivated men and women, and their belongings.

From beginning of such time, it has been a center of moral, intellectual and social culture, together with acquired means and sustenance, tending towards refinement and comfort to established homes of taste and finish.

Within the limits and suburbs of the little capital a learned judiciary and efficient corps of State officials, an able bar, and a large compliment of polite, well-bred people, have tended to extend an influence of courteous-bearing and exemplary living among the rural folk of the locality, until a more orderly community of fairly intelligent people is to be found nowhere. Main interest of the country surroundings has ever been agricultural, in conjunction with the breeding of pure-blooded live stock of one kind or another.

Herds, studs, flock and kennels of Leon county have for decades been a source of supply of cattle, horses, sheep and dogs of high degree. Among the thousand or more whites constituting the countrymen, there are practically lodged no individuals of low, bad propensities, while commonly plain unpretentious people of Anglo-Saxon, Gaelic or Celt extraction, from the mountains of Virginia and North Carolina, there have ever been dispersed among them numbers of planters from tide-water regions there, example of whose courteous manners and exemplary home lives failed not to effect their neighbors. Even to this day most vestiges of such occupancy having gone with exigencies of war and reconstruction.

Forms of speech, tricks of manner, modes of life, peculiar among folk of that school, are traceable among worthy people in the country thereabouts, especially among the old negroes, who, in the long ago, were attendants about the persons and homes of revered old masters.

Extensive culture, with trained forces of slaves, of cotton, tobacco, sugarcane, rice and other grain obtained in those days. Occasional vestiges of a broken arch, a walled canal or solitary chimney, or a columned portico, tell of enterprise and luxury of the past.

The acres remain, estates frequently boast of like boundaries, but all else is changed.

Extended areas of plantation homes, with imposing manor-houses, clustering negro quarters, gin-houses, cotton-presses and cattle shelters, have all disappeared from the prospect. Sections of tumbling walls, a broken arch, a lone chimney or column left standing, tell of the passage of war. Following emancipation of slaves there obtained throughout the beautiful land a system of tenant farming. Unintelligent heads of negro families became renters of small holdings. Cabin homes were dispersed, very much at random, over the land, division fences, decayed and burned up.

White planters abandoned their country homes, moving into towns for self-protection, and for a period of ten to twenty years the old order of things, or any conditions at all resembling them, ceased to exist.

Land proprietors held on to their lands, deriving therefrom reduced and precarious incomes from ill-directed colored tenantry.

Low prices for cotton, sole source of rentals, and its long continuance, so depleted incomes that penury generally supplanted opulence. Rotation of crops, or any attempt at conservation of soils, was out of the question. The gently undulating land surfaces, where cleared and cultivated, had, under former regime, been successfully protected from becoming eroded by use of a system of horizontal hill-side, surface-ditching engineering skill of negro occupants, was unequal to maintaining such practice, and in time serious injury resulted, over wide expanse of fertile lands by erosion and gullying.

Along with such conditions, nature, great purveyor of earthy needs, evolved in the succession of her greatest vegetable farms, indigenous, yielding enormous returns of organic matter, needful for restoration of soil fertility, having roots infested with animal organisms, capable of gathering free nitrogen from the exhaustless atmosphere, and fixing it a soluble nitrate in the surface soils. Then, too, a close, firm sodding species of perennial grass, Bermuda, sprang into existence, taking voluntary possession of worn, eroded land surfaces, and protecting from further waste.

These natural changes in turn brought about conditions favorable to dairying farming.

White men, whose pluck and endurance had remained unrewarded, found that by importation and introduction to breeds of improved dairy cattle, good profit resulted from the making of butter and cheese of fine quality. Output from such industry in a few years reached upwards of ninety tons of choice butter per annum, worth, gross, $45,000.

Extension of the industry, for which the mass of negroes showed no aptness, gradually tended to the conversion of small farms, cultivated by negroes, as tenants, into those of proprietary white men.

That proved an awakening. In the mean time, had come into being in the country new and extended facilities for transmission, in suitably arranged cars, of perishable trucks, to State and inter-state markets, supervised by a judiciously discriminating railway commission, etc.

It became recognized that numerous products, admirably adapted to conditions of soil and climate, but vastly more profitable and feasible than heretofore attempted supplies, were available.

Shade-grown Sumatra Tobacco wrappers for cigars was found to yield 1,000 pounds per acre, and command an average of 75 cents per pound.

Heeded lettuce would bring upwards of $600 per acre, and ten acres a manageable plant.

Very much such results were found to attend experimentation with spinach, cabbage, cauliflower, okra, celery, potatoes, onions, cashews, musk and watermelons, beans, peas, turnips, carrots, egg-plant, cucumbers, strawberries, blackberries and numerous other products.

With the new order of things is increasing demand for land, enhancement in prices of labor and domestic materials, a resuscitation of immigration and settlement, revival of all former features of prosperity, and with all improved sanitation, re-establishment of moral, educational and social standards. Ways are being mended, highways, byways and folk-way, good roads, with well-ordered, contented and happy people to traverse them.

The foregoing review of old Leon and surroundings seems timely mid these days of inquiry and visitation.

It is proposed to follow it up, from week to week, with a series of suggestions of pertinent character.

Having sojourned heretofore, mainly for 60 odd years, the writer feels familiarity with the subject. While much of it will be "book-farming," such variety operates often as successfully twixt plough-handles as book-backs.

OLD NATIVE.

Women as Well as Men are Made Miserable by Kidney and Bladder Trouble.

Kidney trouble preys upon the mind, discourages and lessens ambition; beauty, vigor and cheerfulness soon disappear when the kidneys are out of order or diseased.

Kidney trouble has become so prevalent that it is not uncommon for a child to be born afflicted with weak kidneys. If the child urinates too often, if the urine scalds the flesh, or if, when the child reaches an age when it should be able to control the passage, it is yet afflicted with bed-wetting, depend upon it, the cause of the difficulty is kidney trouble, and the first step should be towards the treatment of these important organs. This unpleasant trouble is due to a diseased condition of the kidneys and bladder and not to a habit as most people suppose.

Women as well as men are made miserable with kidney and bladder trouble, and both need the same great remedy. The mild and the immediate effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It is sold by druggists, in fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles. You may have a sample bottle by mail free, also a pamphlet telling all about Swamp-Root, including many of the thousands of testimonial letters received from sufferers who found Swamp-Root to be just the remedy needed. In writing Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., be sure and mention this paper. Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.
